Without this pledge of circulation few if any of the old banks would have surrendered their State charters, and it would have been impossible to establish the national system at all. Third—This claim would be equally good against any system of banking, for the actual point of the argument is that so long as there shall be a national debt. e Government ought to supply all the creacy of the country, in order to save interest. Suppose the old Staw bank-system were now in existence, with three ndred millions of comparatively unseared circulation, there would be still onger reasons why the Government uld force the State banks to retire their circulating notes, and itself supply the needed currency. The people would, in this supposed case, save just as much terest as they would now save by reing the National Bank notes. Hence, he real juestion is: Shall we have any anking system at all? for if the present excellent system be destroyed it would be impossible to originate another which would not be open to the same objec-

e at the present time, and which is ear the present time, and which is ear the present time, and which is constilicused and least understood by certain class of politicians. My answer this:

First—Even if it were true that the purposely left out of the above list many purposely lef is this:

First — Even if it were true that the Government is paying eighteen millions annually isso the coffers of the National Banks, which could as well be saved to the people by a substitution of greenhack currency, yet it would be far better to pay this sum than to have the greenback or Trassury note system permanently fasteneed upon the country. I regard the issue by the Government of legal tender notes, to be used as a circulating mending, as an anomaly in fluance. It was purely a war measure, justifiable because necessary to the life of the Nation, and like other war measures, should end with the return of a prosperous peace. It is not desirable that the greanbacks be immediately or suddenly withdrawn, but they should be gradually and surely repinced with a currency which is legitimate and permanent.

Second—It was an important part of the contract between the Government and the old State banks, when the latter surrency surrendered their State chartery, that if the cost of engraving and printing and dispense the proventing over items in the above its many items which might otherwise have added to the Government for the privi-lege of the recisions paid by the Government of the apprehence of the materially to the aggregate paid by the Government of the grantinuous service of the banks in receiving transmitting and dispute to the Government revenues. This fact, which I shall soon substantiate, indicates how little this subject is understood by those who are most persistent in their attacks upon the present system of banking.
